Cottonwood II

There's nothing a Cottonwood tree likes more than a lively stream or chuckling river to keep its "feet" cool and wet. This fabulously pungent tree sends out a sweet smell when the water is running high to lure you into its shade for an autumn picnic or summer afternoon siesta under its shiny, shimmering leaves. The Cottonwood can be either male or female, and the fluffy floating seed balls are produced by the females. The tree's name, of course, comes from these light, winsome seed pods.
